Farmer Registration System (FRS)

A nation-wide survey was successfully conducted under the Farmer Registration System (FRS) with the goal of registering all rural farmers engaged in agricultural activities across Bhutan. The FRS is designed to create a centralized and detailed database that captures vital agricultural information, including land ownership, farm infrastructure, livestock facilities, and other key farming resources. This database will serve as an essential tool for guiding evidence-based policymaking, improving agricultural planning, and delivering targeted services to farmers. The initiative reflects the government's strong commitment to advancing data-driven agricultural development and ensuring that every farmer and their assets are properly documented.

The survey was carried out over a two-month period, from August to September 2025, through close coordination among relevant agencies. Data verification was done in collaboration with the National Land Commission for land ownership confirmation and the Census Department for household authentication, ensuring both accuracy and consistency. The program received generous funding support from the European Union (EU) and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) Bhutan, demonstrating international cooperation in strengthening Bhutan's agricultural information systems. In Monggar Dzongkhag, a total of 6,496 households were successfully registered under the FRS, marking a significant achievement toward building a reliable and inclusive national agricultural registry.
